Graduation

The rainy weather couldn't erase the smiles of the graduating class as they filled the FMA to turn their tassels and receive their diplomas. Over 700 students received their bachelor's, master's, or doctoral degrees in the closing session of BJU's 70th anniversary year.

About the cover
BJU's missionary aviation major is designed to train students to fly and maintain aircraft on the mission field. Students get plenty of practical experience, as several aviation mission teams (including groups to Canada, Mexico and Central America, and Arizona) are among BJU's many summer outreaches.

Music faculty member Dan Steenson received the Doctor of Musical Arts degree in piano accompanying from Eastman School of Music at the University of Rochester, NY, and was appointed the doctoral marshal at both the doctoral and undergraduate graduation ceremonies. In addition, Dr. Steenson received the Excellence in Accompanying Award for the second year, the Eastman Named Award Scholarship, and the Barr Award for excellence of academic and musical achievement.

BJU was given the 1997 Power Partner Award honoring excellence and integrity in business relationships with Duke Power. BJU and Duke Power joined forces to cut BJU energy costs and reduce Duke's power load at key times.

The Jerusalem Chamber of the Mack Library recently added an original 1611 King James Version of the Bible to its collection of rare Bibles. Mr. Claude Q. Falligant donated the Bible, which was dedicated by Dr. Bob Jones Jr., Dr. Bob Jones III, and members of the Bible faculty on May 9, 1997.

'94 grad Randy Olsen was inducted into the national honor society of Phi Kappa Phi for his graduate work at the University of Mississippi. The award is the highest academic recognition given to students at the university.

Tried & Tested

Each of us has experienced trials, though perhaps not of the magnitude of these three families. Whether insignificant or earth-shattering, the trials we face help mold us into what we are and what we will become. We can let God fashion our clay into a beautiful masterpiece, or we can let Satan destroy our faith. These two graduates and a faculty couple chose the former path.

Like the Prodigal Son

During his final years at BJU, Peter Petrovich served as a pastor in nearby Travelers Rest , SC. It was there that his youngest son, Randy, at the age of six, was run over with a riding lawn mower. Even though his right leg was almost completely severed up to the knee, the doctors managed to save it.

After numerous surgeries throughout the years, Randy experienced an emotional breakdown. "He was angry at God and at us," Peter said. "He even ran away from home, addicted to pain relievers and in trouble with juvenile authorities."

In July of 1996, Randy came to his father for help. He went to a rehabilitation facility in Florida to try to turn his life around. "For 30 days, the program required Randy to work in the hog pen as a picture of where he was coming from," Peter said. In the hog pen, Randy gave his life back to the Lord and surrendered to full-time service as a preacher.

While doing laundry one day at the rescue mission in Florida, he stepped on the head of a nail. "An infection absorbed into his bandages, but he assumed it was athlete's foot. When he could no longer walk, he went to the hospital and was diagnosed with an infection in both feet that had traveled up his bones. The doctors had no hope for his feet and didn't know if they could save his legs.

"The hole from the nail head was the size of a quarter," Peter said. " His toes were no longer functional. They gave him 72 hours before they would have to start amputating. Randy told me that if he had to preach from a wheelchair, he would. We asked the Lord to heal him according to His will."

And the Lord intervened. "After the 72 hours, the doctor told me that he couldn't find any infection anywhere. Where the hole had been was brand new skin. It was absolutely incredible! When the nurse complimented the doctor on a job well-done, he replied 'I had nothing to do with this.' He later shared that he was a Christian and even witnessed to Randy about the miracle God had performed in his life."

Now 22, Randy is trying to get his life back on track. Presently facing additional surgery and extensive therapy, he still has his senior year of high school to finish, but he is determined to go on to college and be a youth pastor.

"My emotions ran the gamut," Peter said. "At one point, I was ready to leave the pastorate because my heart was so broken. The incredible lesson that my wife and I have learned is that you can never stop loving your children—no matter what they do. Nothing Randy did could make me stop loving him, even though I didn't love his sin. And that's the same unconditional love that God gives to us."

Standing Firm in your Beliefs

In November 1996, '84 grad Herb Tschappler, then a contractor for American Express, received an electronic "diversity" newsletter promoting the homosexual lifestyle as part of "Celebrate Diversity Week." The newsletter was designed to "educate" employees about the gay lifestyle.

"After I received the e-mail on Tuesday, I went home and wrote down Bible verses for my own edification—Scriptures against homosexuality," Herb said. "On Friday, I sent out a letter via e-mail stating my position backed by the Scriptures I had looked up. I knew I would stir up a hornet's nest—I expected hate mail and a reprimand from my superior. Even if I lost my job, as a contractor, I felt I was flexible enough to find another.

"Many people agreed with my stand, but were afraid to say anything because they could lose their benefits. However, I had nothing to lose. I felt a burning desire that I had to present an opposing view so people would know that there is some morality out there. I did receive some positive responses—one man even 'Amened' me, but he later issued an apology."

The next day, Herb was contacted by the man who had hired him and told that an apology was expected. "I replied, 'This world is literally going to hell along with the morals of this nation and you want me to apologize for standing up against homosexuality? My apology is not coming. I cannot. I will not.'"

'84 grad Herb Tschappler

"My contracting company called later and informed me that I was to be removed from the property that day. I was escorted out for 'mis-use of e-mail and inappropriate conduct.' They defined proper use of e-mail as work-related and company-approved. The newsletter was considered company-approved; my response to the sender and receivers of the original document (which I later found out totaled 245) was not."

But the Lord was definitely at work. "I found out that same day that my wife's mother had cancer and needed someone to take care of her," Herb said. "It was obvious that she had to move in with us. The timing of my being let go from work allowed me to go home and help my wife cope with taking care of her mother and care for our four children, as well as build an addition to our house to ease our crowded condition.

"I knew it was all in the Lord's timing. It was ten weeks before I found another job, but the Lord blessed greatly. My wife's mother is now recovering and her cancer is in remission.

"I don't know if I would send the e-mail to everyone in the department again, but I don't regret what I did. I feel the Lord's hand was very much in it—we're just pilgrims in a foreign country."

God's Refining Trials

When Ed and Pam Dunbar of the BJU music faculty lost their 21-month-old daughter, Katie, in 1983, they could have been bitter. "I knew that this could either make or break our ministry," Ed said. "If we became bitter toward the Lord, we would be finished; but if we asked Him to teach us through this trial, our ministries would be strengthened and expanded.

"The Lord showed us that His 'grace is sufficient' and His 'strength is made perfect in weakness.' We had never been weaker physically than during those days following Katie's death; but we thank the Lord that we had never been stronger spiritually. God's grace, the prayers of God's people, and His Word became our greatest source of encouragement."

When the Lord blessed the Dunbars with two more daughters, Kara and Analeisa, they knew that this was the evidence of God's sustaining grace.

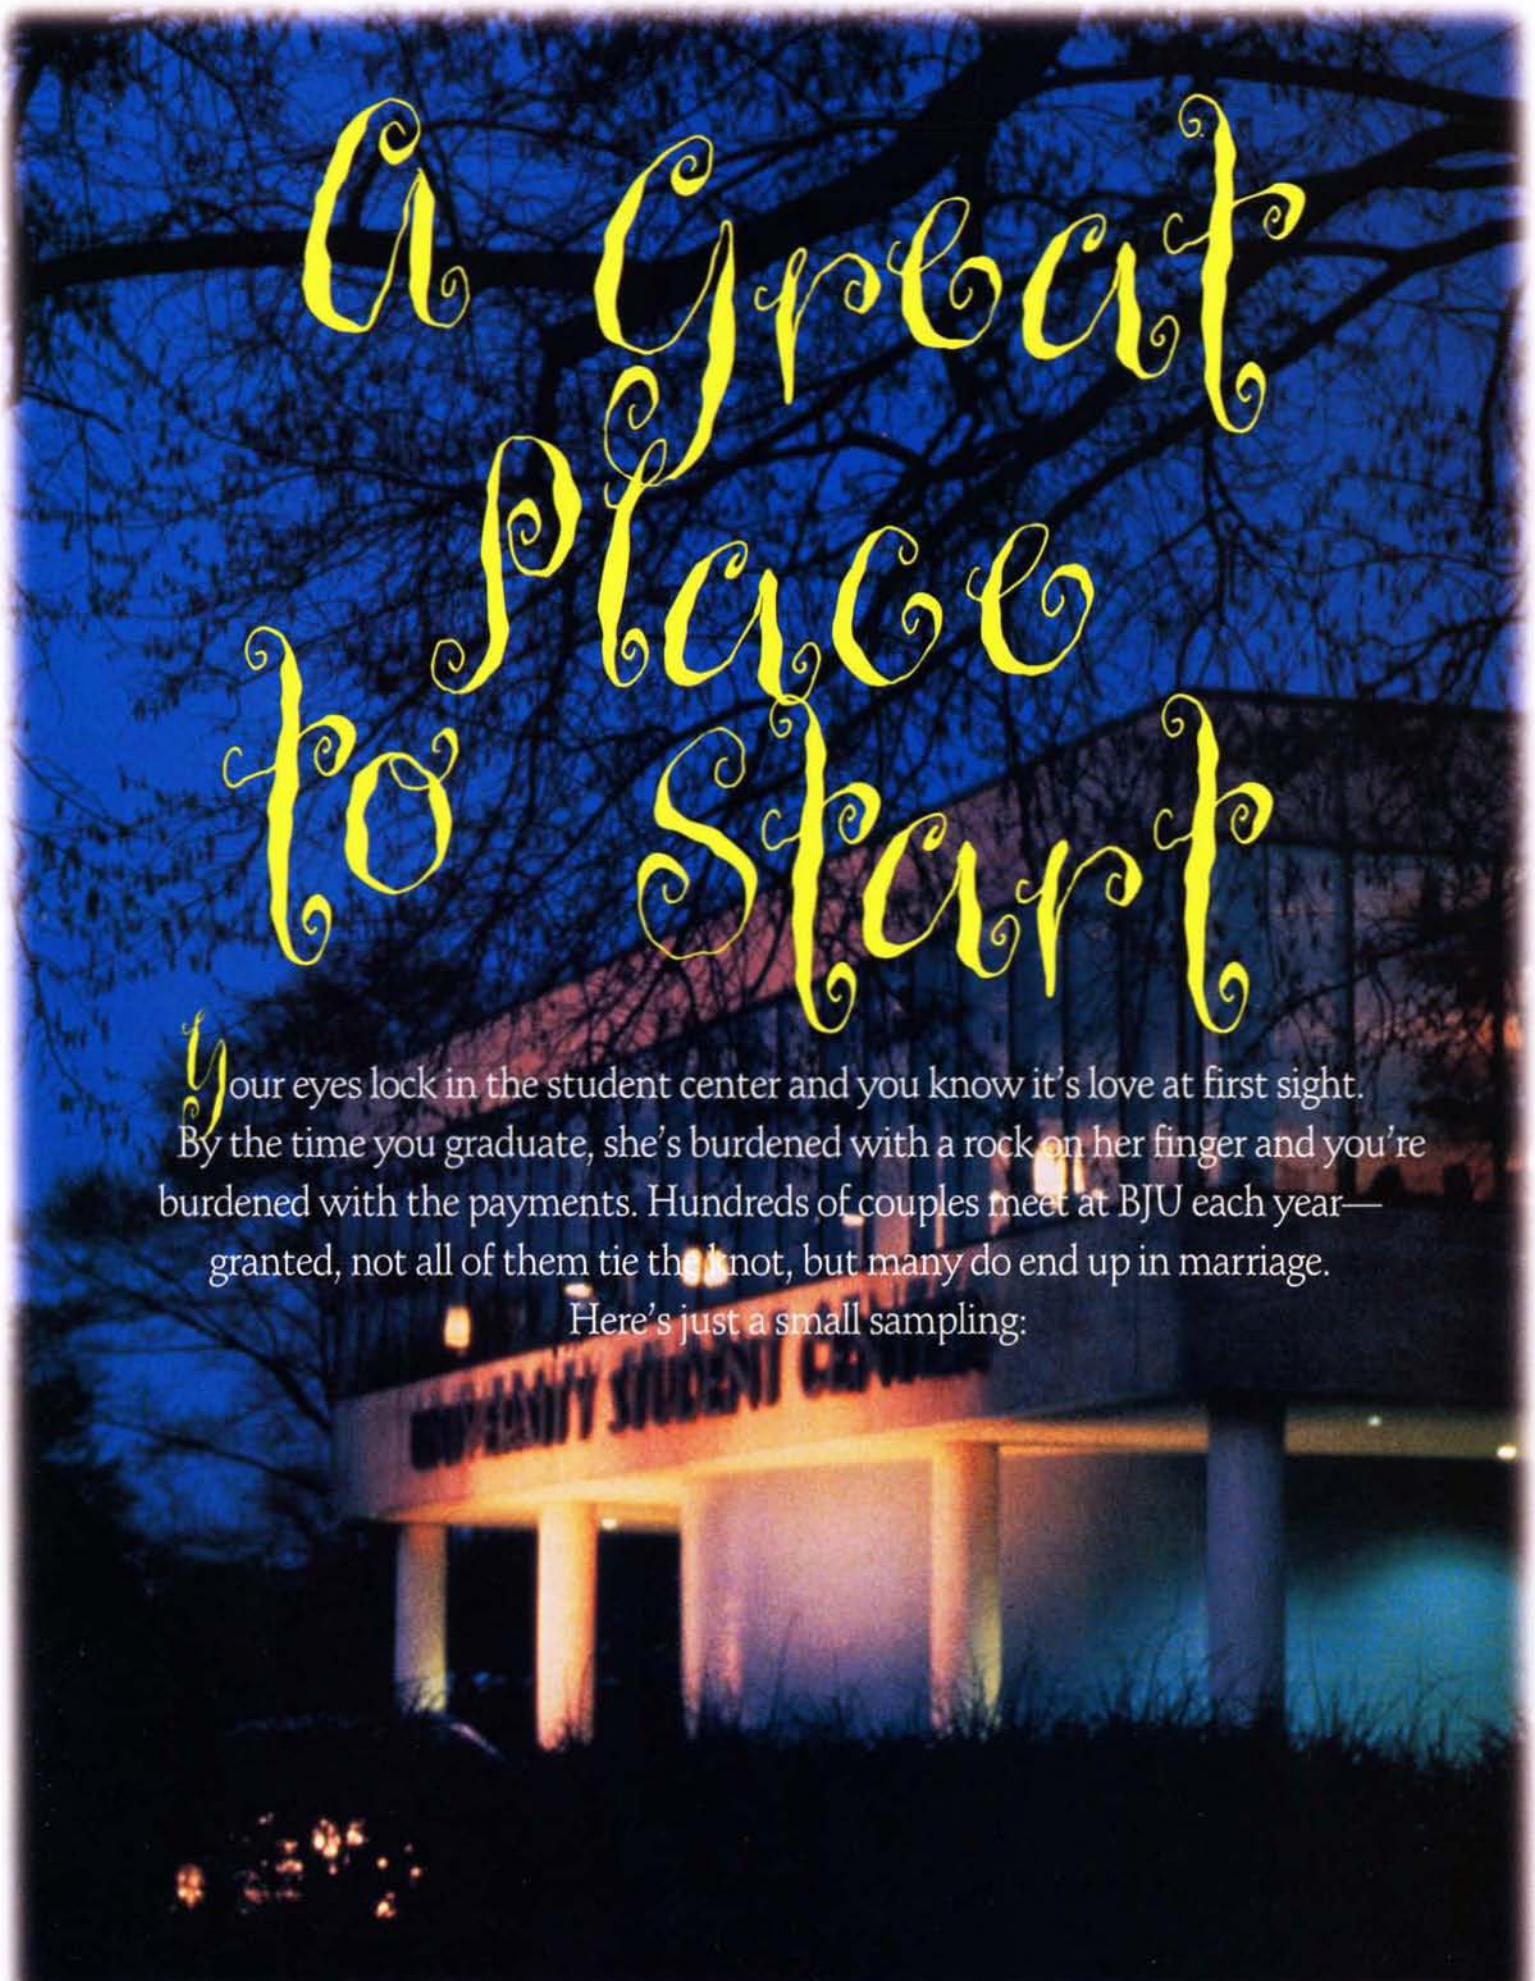
But God was not through strengthening them. "The refining process enables us to withstand future trials. The dross is purged, and the vessel is stronger. This was evident when we faced the death of my Dad in the summer of 1988. My Dad's strong testimony during his illness was a great comfort and encouragement to us."

In 1993, the Lord again reminded Ed and Pam of His sovereign control and their dependence upon Him when Pam was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis. This progressive disease affects some with complete paralysis and others with only minor inconveniences. A new drug for the treatment of this disease was introduced in 1994, but the cost seemed prohibitively expensive. "We realized, though, that the Lord had promised to meet our needs, and we knew that if the drug was needed, He would provide," Ed recalls. "And He did through a fund set up by colleagues at BJU in 1985 for faculty with special needs and staggering medical bills—another token from the Lord."

Music faculty members Ed and Pam Dunbar

Through all their trials, the Dunbars' faith has not wavered. "The gospel of Jesus Christ affects each area of our lives, and our trust must not end at our salvation.

"Ephesians 1:11b gives us hope, knowing that our God 'worketh all things after the counsel of his own will.' We praise the Lord that He has given us that assurance in the midst of adversity. Through these times, we have come to know and trust Him in ways we never could have imagined."



A Great Place to Start

Your eyes lock in the student center and you know it's love at first sight. By the time you graduate, she's burdened with a rock on her finger and you're burdened with the payments. Hundreds of couples meet at BJU each year—granted, not all of them tie the knot, but many do end up in marriage. Here's just a small sampling:

Apology Accepted

For '97 grad Tom Lemon and senior Melissa Godinez, chapel was the campus event that brought them together. It was second semester of Melissa's freshman year that she was assigned a seat next to Tom. "He teased me a lot. But one day, he went too far in his teasing, so he sent me a rose and a note apologizing. I sent him candy the next night."

Melissa then prayed that God would let Tom ask her out just one time. "The next day, he asked me out. And every Thursday for the rest of the year, we went to lunch at the Snack Shop."

Tom remembers, "On our first date, I looked at her and she held my gaze—most girls would look away. And every time I teased her, she never backed down. I knew she wasn't a pushover and that I definitely wanted to get to know her better."

Tom and Melissa dated for a year before deciding that it was serious. After all, Melissa was only a freshman. "From the very beginning, I let him know that I didn't want to get married until after I graduated. And he also had to meet my dad for approval."

When Tom proposed to Melissa on her birthday last December, he took her to the rose garden where he'd first told her that he loved her. Melissa was holding a bouquet of flowers, not knowing that her diamond was tied to the middle rose. Melissa remembers, "When he pulled the rose out, I didn't know what was going on. But when the light hit the diamond, I cried. I'm not an emotional person, but it was a moment I'd anticipated my entire life. It's overwhelming when it finally happens."

Tom graduated last May and Melissa still has one semester of student teaching and will graduate in December 1997. They will be married on January 3, 1998, in Arizona.

True Friendship

Michael Berry was a newcomer to BJU, enjoying his first taste of History of Civilization tutorial class when he noticed Marsha Wood, the girl in the back who always ran in at the last minute. Two weeks later, he asked her out. Marsha said, "I had no idea who he was, but I agreed to meet him at the Snack Shop anyway."

They dated that first year, but broke up in the summertime. However, they never lost their close friendship. Michael recounts, "I felt like I could talk to her about anything. Even when I was dating someone else, I wanted her advice and opinion."

And when Michael broke up with that other girl, he and Marsha once again started spending time together. "It never even entered my mind to date her again because she had let me know our sophomore year that she didn't think we had a future. But I was a lot more mature—the Lord had done a lot in my life since our freshman year. She quickly became my best friend."

Marsha remembers, "I really prayed about my relationship with Mike. I knew almost immediately that the Lord was bringing him back into my life." They started dating again and will be married in just a few days—August 30, 1997.

Michael says, "The Lord has blessed me with a wonderful friend with whom I pray, read God's Word, go through trials, and share my joys and triumphs. The Lord knew we would be together. We just tried to do it in our own timing. How wonderful things are when done in His timing!"

A Family Tradition

Del and Audrey Skillman not only met at BJU, but they also passed their good dating tradition on to their two sons, Tim and Jonathan.

Del and Audrey met in October of 1959 when they were seated at the same dinner table in the Dining Common (back when seating was assigned). "We were only allowed a certain number of hours in the dating parlor each week, and we definitely used all of them!"

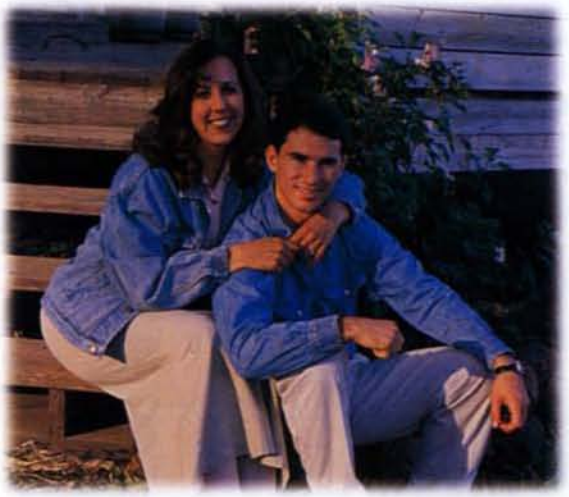
After their freshman year, Del and Audrey were married and dropped out of school. But it wasn't long before the pull of Greenville brought them back to BJU. "I knew I needed to go back to school. I told my wife that if I ever did go back, the only place I would go to is Bob Jones." After Del completed his degree in 1965, they returned to California where Del is now the Welfare Director for the Department of Social Services in Tehama County.

"We are thankful for BJU and consider it the basis for our appropriate faith and support of how we should live. Obviously, BJU has been a large influence in my family's life. And I am thankful for that. We helped our sons through BJU. As far as I'm concerned, that's the best thing we could do."

Jim Skillman also met his wife Bridget Murray in the mid-'80s at the Dining Common. Tim recounts, "She worked as a hostess and managed six tables, including the one where I sat. I fell immediately in love with her."

Like his parents, Tim and Bridget enjoyed the typical BJU dating life. "Basketball games were always fun for us—we liked to sit in the gym. We didn't go to the dating parlor very often because I had to study a lot."

After graduating in 1987, Tim and Bridget were married in North Carolina and moved to California. Bridget currently works as a social worker for Sacramento County and teaches part-time at the University of California Davis extension. Tim, who is currently working on his MBA, spent time in stocks and later in the banking industry. But when the business administrator of Arcade Baptist Church, where Tim and Bridget were regular members, moved to Chicago, the church officers approached Tim. "I didn't think it was for me, but I applied anyway. The more I prayed about it, the more I realized that God was calling me to this position. I now manage the finances, accounting, facilities, and administrative sides of the over-2,000-member, multi-campus church."



Jonathan Skillman and Angie Loucks met during their high school years in California. But when Angie, who is two years younger than Jonathan, finally came to BJU, their dating life was pretty typical. "We went to the dating parlor and the Snack Shop. And, of course, dating outings."

But Jonathan and Angie didn't spend their entire college careers together. "Angie sat out for a year, putting her three years behind me." Jonathan recalls, "And after I graduated and went to law school, we were thrown into a long-distance relationship." Angie remembers, "Before I went back to BJU, we got engaged. Because we both took it very seriously; it was a sense of security for us—it even helped my grades. We both focused more on our studies." Their daily letters and twice-a-week phone calls proved worthwhile when they were married after Angie graduated in 1994.

They moved back to California where Jonathan is Deputy District Attorney and is currently working as a prosecutor in Tehama County, the same county where his father serves. Angie, a magazine art director for more than a year, now runs a graphic design business out of their home, designing logos, magazine illustrations, brochures, and graphics for the Internet.

Although training young people for service to Christ is our goal, we can't help feeling pleased when a young man and woman are brought together here and go on to serve the Lord.

The President's Corner

With 70 years of history behind us, the University looks forward to the future with confidence in the calling and grace of God.

The University's steadfastness in the faith and to a course consistent with the founder's purposes is of utmost importance to the new generation of faculty and administrative leadership that the Lord is raising up to take the University into the 21st century, if He tarries.

I'm immeasurably grateful to God for the men and women He is calling to be the future leadership of BJU, and it occurred to me that friends like you who are praying for the school's future would like to meet a few of the many that the Lord is raising up. From time to time in this column, I'll be introducing them to you as I am doing here. –Bob Jones III

In May of 1997, I began my stretch of a relay race at Bob Jones University. This race is run, not on the athletic field, but in an on-going desire to keep Bob Jones University a bastion of Biblical fundamentalism. Dr. Dwight Gustafson, who has carried the baton for the last 43 years, retired as Dean of the School of Fine Arts to assume teaching and conducting responsibilities in the Division of Music. As I reach back to grab the baton from his outstretched hand, I cannot help thinking about the race that is yet ahead of me. How foolish it would be for me to change direction from the runners who have preceded me. When the race began over 70 years ago, the path and end goal were firmly established. As a new leader at BJU, my heart's desire is to continue the race and direction that were charted when the school was founded.

While I did not have the honor of serving as a pioneer during the early years of BJU, I do consider my future role with the University as a God-given responsibility. No Christian university has reached the age of 100 and remained true to its original beliefs. While God has certainly blessed our first 70 years of existence on this earth, the next 30 years are crucial to the spiritual viability of Bob Jones University. With God's help, I want to see BJU continue as the bellwether of fundamentalism among Biblical Christianity.

The uniqueness of Bob Jones University lies not in its beautiful buildings or in its well-manicured lawns, but rather in its people. I am indebted to the dedicated faculty and staff of Bob Jones University who have sacrificially given of themselves to teach me how to live. It is now time for me to put that godly training into action and to pass down a rich and godly heritage to a generation that will follow mine. Bob Jones University has been and will continue to be a safe haven for students seeking to educate themselves in an institution that unashamedly stands for the truths found in God's Word.

Darren P. Lawson

Darren Lawson graduated from BJU in 1986 with a degree in Rhetoric and Public Address and in 1988 completed his M.A. in Platform Arts from BJU. He earned his Ph.D. in Organizational Communication from the University of Kansas in 1996. He is Dean of the School of Fine Arts and continues to teach courses in communication and is an active member of the University Classic Players as well as director of Vespers and University drama teams.

Mr. and Mrs. John Pruden

Aircraft Maintenance and Missionary Aviation Faculty and Clinic Nurse

"During my first year of teaching in the SAS, Dr. Bob III challenged the faculty to use that which the Lord had placed in our hands for His work, no matter how simple the tool. In Exodus, Moses used his shepherding rod—that which was in his hand—to lead his people out of Egypt. As an aircraft mechanic, I use an assortment of tools for my work. But only when we yield our tools to the Lord and place ourselves at His disposal can we expect His blessings.

"During the summers, I lead mission teams composed of aircraft mechanics and missionary aviation students to Mexico and Central America. We repair planes for the missionaries and also pass out tracts and witness to the nationals. Watching my students apply what they have learned in the classroom to the unique situations of the mission field is the joy of the ministry for me. As they surrender to the Lord their time, talents, and treasures, He truly does perform miracles."

Mrs. Vicki Peek

Office Administration Faculty

"For the last five summers, I have worked as the Assistant to the President for Phillips International, an executive search consulting firm.

"I have helped develop company and state conference brochures and provided computer support, such as previewing software for use by the company and then writing instruction guides that are adapted to the company's specific needs. I am presently helping to develop a curriculum for a video learning system.

"As a business faculty member, this job is very valuable because it keeps me in touch with current technology and business practices in today's corporations. It also allows me to present real-life examples to my students and to relay to them a sense of professionalism."

Dr. Stephen Hankins
Bible Faculty

"My ambition is that my ministry in the summer contribute directly to my work throughout the school year. Often, I spend the summer writing Scripture expositions for various University publications. Over the last ten summers, I have taken mission trips to the Caribbean and Eastern Europe that have been tremendously enriching experiences. To witness the power of the Gospel, the spiritual hunger of Christians in other cultures, and the profound needs they have always fuels my zeal for God and His work. These trips also provide valuable, practical examples for use in my teaching of Bible and other ministry-related subjects.

"This past summer, I developed and recorded a Christian Apologetics course for Extended Education. The course will be available for correspondence as well as via satellite.

"For the last several years, I have also been pastoring a church in Anderson, SC. Pastoring helps me keep focused on the Biblical issues and topics that specifically impact lay Christians.

"My goal is to prepare my students for living life for the glory of Christ in the ministry of a local church and in their chosen vocation. Hands-on church ministry full time in the summer, I believe, helps me reach that goal."

Dr. and Mrs. John Matzko
History and English Faculty

"Since 1986, I've spent most of my summers in activities that have improved my teaching. I've worked for the National Park Service for six seasons. During three of these I served as a costumed park ranger at Arlington House, the home of Robert E. Lee. More recently, Rachel and I cataloged archaeological artifacts at Fort Union Trading Post National Historic Site on the border of North Dakota and Montana.

"In 1988, I participated in an archaeological dig at Flowerdew Hundred, a seventeenth-century site about thirty miles west of Jamestown. Three years later, I studied the early Roman Empire at the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill with classicists from across the country. Both these opportunities were made possible by grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities.

"We had our best summer as a family in 1992 when we contracted with a private company to map truck services near interstate highways. My wife, fourteen-year-old son, and I worked as a team, driving off virtually every interstate exit from southern Wisconsin to Seattle.

"This past summer I continued to write a book-length manuscript about the Fort Union site, emphasizing the local determination and the remarkable serendipity that made possible the reconstruction of the fort during the 1980s."

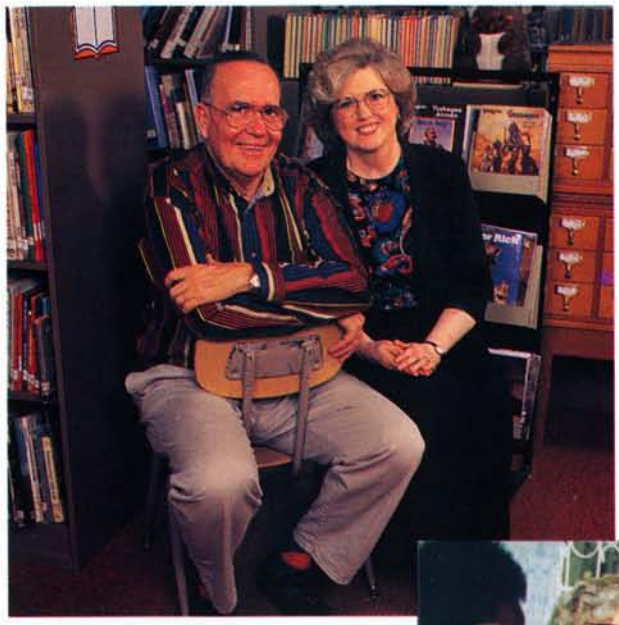
Mr. Emery Bopp
Chairman Emeritus of the Art Faculty

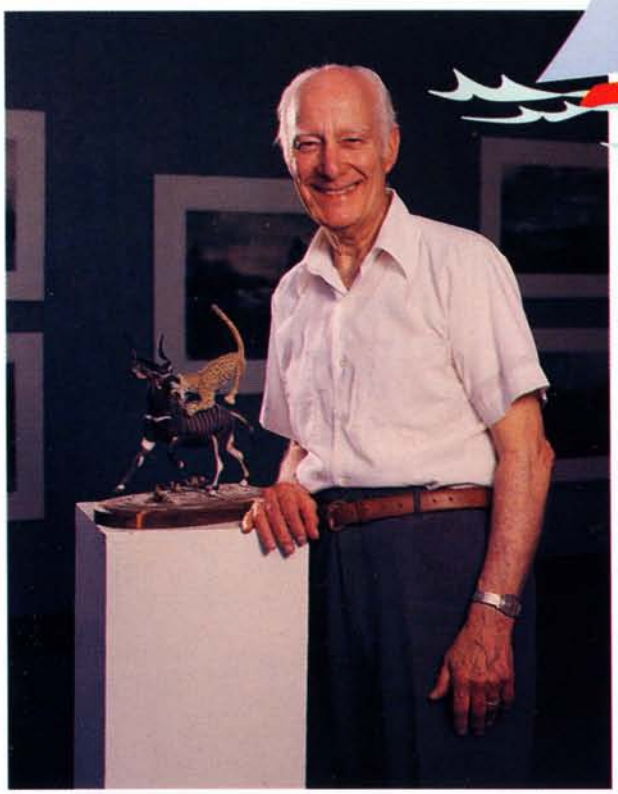
"Because campus activity during the summers was slim when my wife and I began our ministry here at BJU, we returned to New York for the summers. During our third summer, the Lord opened an opportunity to work for the Louis Paul Jonas Studios.

"Mr. Jonas is a well-known animal sculptor who has sculpted for the American Museum of Natural History in New York City. He has prepared animal displays and sculptures for museums all over the country and even in Venezuela. I worked in the miniature department casting, tooling, and eventually painting these collectors items in full, natural color. We were able to share our testimony for the Lord with those we worked with and those who visited. One young man for whom we were praying was saved at a Bible study service in Albany.

Also, during these summers four young women we met came to BJU. One completed both her undergraduate and master's degrees in art here, and the others finished their degrees, met their husbands and are out in Christian work with their husbands—a pastor, an evangelist and a principal of a Christian school.

"Mr. Jonas invited me back for about 30 summers. During the last three summers, I sculpted a full-size model of a deinonychus dinosaur, now in Yale's Peabody Museum of Natural History."





Dr. and Mrs. Tim Watson
Elementary Education Faculty and Media Center Staff Member

"During the summer months, I have had the opportunity of ministering with teachers in Guam, Nova Scotia, British Columbia, and Kenya. These experiences have impacted my life and my teaching here at BJU.

"In Guam, the teachers have the opportunity to earn their master's degree from BJU during the summers. Because it is better to take the teacher to Guam than to bring all of the students to Greenville, I travel to the island to teach and also to preach, teach Sunday school, and work in a jail ministry. My wife speaks in women's fellowships.

"In Kenya, the mission team is able to spend much time with students eager to learn. Our experiences in Kenya enable us to appreciate many things God gives us. I have met many Christians who, though lacking this world's goods, are satisfied with having only Christ. It is sobering to realize that those who have little are sometimes closer to God than those who have much."

So You've got a COLD...

Catching a cold is inevitable. With some care you can decrease your chances of catching one, but no one is immune.

And college life goes on, cold or no cold. So how do you manage a schedule that seemed awfully full BEFORE you got sick? And how can you do your best to avoid getting sick in the first place?

✓ If you feel yourself coming down with something, get as much rest as possible. Put off that pizza party and get some extra sleep. And I'm sure your boyfriend/girlfriend can forgive you if you ask for a rain-check on the after-dinner Snack Shop visit in order to get an extra hour of rest before study time.

✓ Don't skimp on meals. Believe it or not, all the nutrients your body needs to successfully fight illness are NOT contained in a package of sticky buns from the vending machine. (And no, adding a Mountain Dew to the mix doesn't help matters any.)

✓ And if you do get sick, be considerate of others. It's no fun to give your cold to all of your roommates, and it doesn't win you any friends either. Keep your hands clean, use tissues, cover your mouth and nose when coughing or sneezing. And if you don't seem to be getting better, check into the campus infirmary for a day of rest—your roommates, and your own body, will probably thank you.

Here are a few tips from students who have had colds and survived, and even hints from a doctor for good measure!

Jenny Shahinian
Graphic Design
Limassol, Cyprus

"My mother always says, 'If you can cure it with tea mixed with lemon and honey, you'll be just fine.' It is good for the throat—it works wonders."

Kerry Penwell
Physics
Oklahoma City, OK

"I find two things difficult when I'm sick. One is making myself stop. We have such busy schedules that if we don't stop, we just get sicker. The other thing is not being at home. When I am sick, my mom really spoils me."

Danielle Ames
Financial Management
Dewittville, NY

"It is important to make sure your roommates are well and that you're doing what you can to help out. Pack their bags and take them to the infirmary if necessary!"

Jason Hays
Marketing
Lima, OH

"When students get sick, usually their prayer group and roommates end up catching it too. I think that we should really be concerned for the welfare of each other. If you do get sick, find a quiet place and sleep it off. And try not to spread it to others."

Dr. Saito's Top Ten:

Considering how many of us wind up sick, maybe we could use a little common sense. Dr. Jean Saito, who treats BJU students at the Clinic, offers her easy tips to survival:

1. Eat right—a well-balanced diet is a great way to keep healthy and energized.

2. Get plenty of rest—most of us can't function well on four to five hours of sleep.

3. Get a release from stress—do something to take your mind off of your tests, papers, projects, etc. (Hey, some of us will use any excuse for not doing homework.)

4. Exercise—you'd be surprised how a few minutes each day will increase your immunity and energy (it's also a stress relief).

5. This is obvious, but cover your mouth with a tissue when you sneeze or cough. Then, throw it away and wash your hands! Nobody wants your germs.

6. If you miss a meal here and there, take a multiple vitamin to ensure you get balanced nutrition (but this is no substitute for good eating habits).

7. If you get sick, go to Barge (the campus infirmary) for treatment. Don't push yourself when you're ill.

8. Consider a flu vaccine before flu season. It decreases your chance of getting the flu and might even help prevent frequent colds.

9. Wash your hands frequently.

10. Keep your hands off your face.
